

Spa Therapy at Home

Posted by mgrunlun September 29, 2008 05:00AM

Courtesy of BainUltraBainUltra's Vedana

The market is saturated with products that claim to transform showers into oases of relaxation. BainUltra's new Vedana is touted as delivering spa-grade therapies at home.

Courtesy of BainUltraVedana offers a spa experience at home

The sound system envelops the user and offers pre-programmed music or the option of hearing your favorite musical selections.

The thermotherapy system reaches 176 degrees Fahrenheit. A session raises body temperature, boosts metabolism, eliminates toxins, soothes muscles and joints, revitalizes skin and promotes relaxation, according to the manufacturer.

Litebook technology offers the latest in ray intensity, wavelength and range. Regular use may synchronize the body's internal clock by regulating sleep hormones to minimize disorders such as insomnia and problems faced by night shift workers.

Chromatherapy diffuses colors to maximize their therapeutic benefits. Different colors may be used to influence biorhythms to create stimulating, calming or healing effects.

An essential oil nebulizing diffuser provides aromatherapy through skin and nasal absorption and odor immersion.

Choose your own routine or pre-programmed sessions blend therapies.

Click on <http://www.trends.bainultra.com/web/wcm/connect/bainultra/en.1.html>

Categories:

Comments

Footer